- Hi. I'm Shell. I'm an online journalism reporter based out of Chicago. We at the women's and the girls' wrestling team have a column on this site where we talk about issues with just womens' and girls' wrestling in particular. My personal take on it is that I see a lot of women being held back because there are certain reasons men can get away with doing incredibly dangerous things with bodies but women can't. I mean, I love wrestling. I love knowing that I can put myself in those shoes. But I also know that sometimes women are told that their bodies are not natural or unsafe or that they're not tough. Or that they shouldn't be on the wrestling mat because they're too small, too light or the wrong body type. Sometimes you have someone who actually tells you that your body is too small and then you're not allowed to even wrestle or compete in high school, which is a huge deal. And it's also something that happens in college and in the pros because the managers and the promoters tell you that you don't deserve to be on the mat for your size. Or that your size is not physically sound enough. And these are just a few examples of the instances in which women and girls are not even allowed to compete in wrestling because they don't fit a certain body type. And it's really sad to know that you could be too small and not fit that type and not be allowed to compete or be penalized for that. At the same time, when I think about it, it's also completely ironic because most of the athletes that we see on these big posters and these ads and on these posters and things like that are men. And not only are they so huge, but not only are they very, very muscular, but they're also very masculine. And, I mean, it's hilarious when you look at these men and think about how much flak they get for being super masculine, but you don't hear about this when it comes to girls and womens' wrestling because it's like it's almost a more feminine performance. And so

System Requirements:

Once it was revealed that you have to be qualified for the Fighter class to play Spacefighter, I got a few people saying they'd like to play some space fighter stuff. It sounded to me like Spacefighter was going to be a fairly niche product, the kind of game that wouldn't attract a lot of players. With any luck, you don't have to be qualified for Fighter to play space fighter, since Fighter and Spacefighter aren't going to be put together in the same release, right? Right. That said
